COLDER WEATHER PROMISED; WARM SPELL AT AN END

Big Drop in Temperature is Prediction For Tomorrow

NORTH WIND COMING

Animals at Zoo Have Been Preparing For Weeks

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 13.—(INS)—Cold today; much colder tomorrow.

That's the weather Uncle Sam's prognosticator predicted for Pennsylvania today. It's the end of an abnormally warm November and, the forecaster explained, there's a north wind behind this cold blast that will increase to unknown intensity.

The ominous report was not news to the animals at the Philadelphia Zoo. They've been expecting it for weeks and they have prepared for a real, old-fashioned Winter, said Robert Gilpin, assistant director.

If you can believe the Zoo inhabitants it's going to be a winter of plenty of snow and low temperatures. Prairie dogs are digging deeper burrows, squirrels are storing everything in sight, groundhogs are so fat they can just waddle and the polar bears have anticipatory gleams in their eyes.

"Sure signs," declared Gilpin, who pins a lot of faith, for instance, on groundhogs.

"You can trust a groundhog," he pointed out. "These little fellows who normally weigh about five pounds have been stuffing lettuce and cabbage until some of them can hardly stand up."

"Even the Buffalo has an extra heavy coat and the grizzly bear is about two weeks ahead of schedule on his winter garment and more reluctant than ever to take a bath. The free birds which camp around here because food is plentiful go off to an early start and about every animal has his money down on a cold winter."

From other parts of the state come reports that farmers see the same kind of winter as the Zoo's inhabitants in the plentiful supply of nuts and berries and extra heavy coats on the rabbits.

"Yes, sir," added Gilpin, "trust the animals; that's our motto. Now maybe all this means nothing to a scientific forecaster, but wait until those blizzards come howling around."

Meteorologists admitted November so far has been about 15 degrees warmer than usual and should return to "normal" this week-end. They declined, however, to comment on the coming season.

"The best we can do," said one weatherman, "is day to day."

Newtown Takes Action To Stop Circular Nuisance

NEWTOWN, Nov. 13.—Newtown has joined the ever growing list of communities which has taken steps to eliminate the circular distribution nuisance. Action was taken at a dinner meeting of the Chamber of Commerce held in the Brick hotel and attended by 45 persons.

It was during the reports of standing committees that the question was brought up and following a brief discussion the committee was instructed to petition council to draw up an ordinance regulating circular distribution.

In a number of towns such distribution has been prohibited entirely while in others a heavy fee must be paid for the privilege.

Out-of-town merchants are the greatest offenders, it is reported, and distribute whole sections of newspapers in some boroughs, thus taking business from the local merchants.

CORNWELLS HEIGHTS, Nov. 13.—Sixty-six individuals registered at Bensalem Township high school, yesterday, for the annual session of the Student Writers' Assembly of Bucks County. The registration book showed groups divided as follows: 11 faculty advisors, 10 editors of school publications, 33 staff members, and 12 guests. With the students, faculty members, and guests assembled in the school library at 3.45, superintendent of Bensalem Township public schools, Samuel K. Superintendent of Bucks County public schools, J. Harry Hoffman, Doylestown, was introduced by Mr. Faust. Mr. Hoffman mentioning the responsibility of the faculty advisors for the staff of the school papers. "I know you are doing a fine piece of work, and are going to continue," he concluded.

Fire Chief Reports On The Condition of Various School Buildings

SOME PAINTING DONE

MORRISVILLE, Nov. 13.—Miss Charlotte B. Kohler, a graduate of Red Lion High School, Brownsville Junior College, Oberlin Conservatory of Music, and the University of Alabama, was elected librarian at a meeting of the Board of Education. She was selected from a list of 31 applications and will succeed Miss Alma Winton, resigned.

The School Directors expressed their appreciation and stated it was an excellent job and asked that such an inspection be made an annual practice.

The Building Committee presented to the Board a tentative outline of rules and regulations to govern the renting of the school auditorium and Summerseat for events permitted by the School law but before final action is taken each member will study a copy of these provisions.

The Board also voted to look into the matter of getting bids for coal in the Spring instead of Fall with a view of getting lower prices on coal.

A report was read that six class rooms have already been painted under the W. P. A. project there and that the work is progressing very satisfactorily. There is considerable additional work to be done there.

The School Board will re-organize at the December meeting when the president and vice president will be elected and committees appointed.

Members of the Board will urge the general public to attend a dinner to be held in the school cafeteria November 21st under the auspices of the Parent-Teachers Association and the proceeds will be used for the purchase of glasses and for tonsil operations of needed children.

WHO WILL PAY THE PIPER?

(By "The Stroller")

In an attractive little folder being distributed among the employees of the Thomas L. Leedom Company there is a message brim-full of sound common sense and worthy of thoughtful consideration by everyone.

"24 Billion Dollars—Who Will Pay the Piper?" is the caption on the title page.

"Spending Nearly a Million Dollars an Hour" is a sub-head and then the following message appears:

The United States News has pointed out the shocking fact that the money voted to be spent by the United States in 1934, 1935 and 1936 totals 24 billion dollars a sum equal to the total spent by all administrations from George Washington to Woodrow Wilson—a period of 124 years.

During that 124 years we fought four wars, and our nation grew to 43 highly developed States.

Who is paying and who is going to continue to pay in larger and larger amounts, these staggering all-time record debts that are fast piling up?

These debts will be paid by you and me who work for an honest living and ask no favors. We will pay them in direct taxes of many kinds and indirectly in higher prices for everything we buy. Politicians get out of paying many taxes either because they're exempt or they "gota-drag."

Surely something should be done for the worthy unemployed who really want to work and don't like to be carried on the backs of others. But let's not permit politicians to pull the wool over our eyes by using relief measures as an excuse for extravagance, and employment of large numbers of their relatives and pals to build their political machines.

In business, good jobs go to those whose records prove they can use money, time, materials and equipment with economy and efficiency. Those who are extravagant and wasteful lose out.

We are employers of men we elect to public office. We should elect men who will guard our interests as we must guard the interests of those who employ us.

Peace Program Is Given As W. C. T. U. Has Meeting

At the W. C. T. U. meeting at the residence of Mrs. L. C. Watson, Bath street, last evening, Miss Marie Watson, who was a delegate to the recent state convention of the W. C. T. U. at Butler, gave a full and interesting report of the sessions.

The peace program of the meeting included readings selected by Miss Mary J. Haines, these being: "World Opinions by Stanley High; "When the Guns Cease," "What Are Sanctions and Why They Are Called Sanctions," "War Is Moral Cowardice" written by Walter W. VanKirk. In the readings of the latter, read by a union member, it was told that "The war maker is the world's real coward. He is afraid to fight with his mind. That is why he fights with sabres, guns and battle-ships."

In one of the readings it was told how the dry forces welcome a new and powerful ally to the cause of peace, the radio. The World Peace Ways with co-operation of a manufacturing company is broadcasting a program every Thursday night over the Columbia system, this supplying a long-needed appeal to create the powerful mass sentiment which is the only assurance of maintaining peace.

Refreshments were served by the hostesses.

The next meeting will be in the First Baptist Church, when a medal contest by the L. T. L. and Y. P. B. and a food donation will occur. This will be on December 10th.

EDUCATION WEEK IS OBSERVED IN SCHOOLS

Pupils Told to Appreciate The Opportunities They Have

LISTEN TO LECTURE

Two addresses were delivered to the students of Bristol high school during assembly yesterday afternoon, the program marking Education Week.

Principal David Hertzler was one of the speakers, and in his talk queried the young men and young women assembled, asking if they fully realize the opportunities they enjoy, and urged that they give thought to the same and make fuller use of them. Mr. Hertzler asked the pupils if they realized just what is expected of them; if they help their parents at home, and show gratitude for what their parents are doing for them in giving opportunities to attend school. He urged that each stop and think occasionally of what has been accomplished in a particular day. "Consider if you have done your best during the play-hour, and in the class room. Ask yourselves if you have lived up to what is expected of you at home and at school."

Mr. Hertzler introduced as the next speaker W. R. Duckett, a blind lecturer, who told the Bristol high school students something of his life. He ceased attending school when 14 years of age. At the age of 25 he lost his vision. It was then he realized the need of an education, entered high school as a blind Freshman, and later graduated from the Teachers' College at Pittsburg, Kansas. He took up post-graduate work at that institution, studied at the University of Chicago, and University of Nebraska; receiving his M. A. degree at Columbia University in 1932. For three years he has been lecturing in high schools.

Throughout all his travels and work, Mr. Duckett is lead by "Scottie," a faithful collie dog, whom he secured from a pound in Kansas City.

Throughout his talk on "Character Education," Mr. Duckett inspired the young folks. He told of finding himself without funds when first stricken blind; and then mentioned his determination to return to high school. Difficulties were overcome, and he found it hard at times, as all lessons had to be read to him. The local students were told that the blind student would not accept through pity any grades or marks he did not deserve.

"No physical limitation is a handicap in obtaining an education and making good, if you are determined," he added.

"Scottie," the dog, was introduced, and after telling of the dog's faithfulness and adherence to duty, Mr. Duckett told the scholars it is the duty of each individual to render the best possible service to society. The manner in which the dog has sacrificed itself and gives devotion was stressed. "Scottie has a definite role to fulfill, 24 hours a day; and he is always ready to obey his master. His dog is serving a useful purpose in life." The pupils were then questioned, being asked if they are doing all possible in leading a useful life; and if they are following their educational advantages as they should. The inspirational, instructive and entertaining message was exceptionally well received.

Scottie was awarded the hero medal of honor, for service to his blind master, said award being featured by Albert Payson Terhune in 1932.

GUILD AT EDGELY DISPLAYS A TOTAL OF 1515 ARTICLES

Increase of 387 is Shown Over Last Year's Number

AT THE HAWKES' HOME

Miss Eleanor V. Bosserman, of Sheltering Arms, Phila., Speaks

EDGELY, Nov. 13.—The ninth annual ingathering and exhibition of garments by the Edgely Branch, Needlework Guild of America, was held yesterday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Thomas G. Hawkes. There were 80 women attending, and all expressed surprise at the variety and number of beautiful garments arranged on the spacious sun-porch. Ever in the minds of the members of the Edgely Guild is the thoughtfulness to the girl and boy of school age. Plans for their welfare are always of first consideration, and this again was shown in the display, when 75 dresses were made by the sewing committee. The display was very attractive and colorful, and all garments useful. The sewing committee of the guild completed 625 garments, which include warm under-clothing, pajamas, bed socks, as well as attractive outer garments; hand-knitted sweaters for boys, and hugme-tights for the older women. An attractive assortment of infants' wear in every detail; and a selection of caps, booties, socks, all hand made. The display was a great credit to the members and their friends.

Comment on the work is an inspiration to the members to give more freely of their time, to help alleviate the suffering and hardship of others. The number of garments on display to date is 1515, an increase over last year of 387.

Mrs. Walter G. Stilwell, president, presided, and the meeting called at 2.30. The report of the 8th annual meeting was given by Mrs. William O'Dea, secretary, and the treasurer's report given by Mrs. Herbert O. Banes.

Mrs. Stilwell cordially welcomed the members and friends, and expressed pleasure at having so many people attend this meeting. She invited all to examine the garments, and express her pleasure at the increase of garments. The president extended thanks to Mrs. Roland Quinn, who has been the official garment cutter for eight years. This is a responsible task, to cut hundreds of yards of material. Mrs. Thomas Hawkes was thanked for her many kindnesses to all the guild members, and her untiring efforts to aid at all times.

Mrs. Stilwell then introduced to the assembly Miss Eleanor V. Bosserman, of the Sheltering Arms, Philadelphia. The Sheltering Arms was established in 1882, and was founded by the Protestant Episcopal Churches, and under control of a board of managers, two trained nurses, doctor, and a number of social service workers. In 1922 it was made a member of the Welfare Federation of Charities, and receives a certain allotment as such from Philadelphia. Up until 1923 the home was located at House and Beam streets, but in 1923 moved to the Harrison estate, Germantown.

Miss Bosserman stated that from January, 1933, to January, 1934, 311 girls had been attended by the Sheltering Arms, but of these, 67 were kept at the home, the others taken care of by hospitals, and other welfare agencies. Many unusual and interesting stories were told by Miss Bosserman. She told of what great good is accomplished by the Guilds' donations to the institution—that so many times wonder where the next layette will come from.

A poem inspired by the unselfish giving of time and effort of members of the Edgely Branch and of members of other Guilds, was written by Miss Anna K. Hawkes, and read at the meeting by the president:

— GIVING —
For every gift we give to one in need,
For every hungry mouth we help to feed,
We earn no pay in earthly goods—instead,

Our souls are nourished and our spirits fed.

"Give and take"—we hear the old phrase every day;
"Give what you have to give in goods and thought,"

Then your own happiness you will have bought.

Our life is spent in giving, our last breath

Is our last gift to God, ourselves in death.

And for this what do we receive from Him?

Spiritual peace, measured by what we've been.

What we have been is measured by our "giving"—

Which is merely another word for "living."

The president invited all to remain after adjournment and enjoy home made cake, coffee, tea, salted nuts, served by the hostess committee, Mrs. Philip Eckenroth, chairwoman.

HAWAII WANTS STATEHOOD

What with "luau" (Hawaiian bouquets), "hukilau" (fishing parties), swimming, surfing, sight-seeing and the hearings in Honolulu and in principal towns on the largest Hawaiian islands, the committee from Congress on Hawaiian statehood had a gay and busy stay in the Mid-Pacific Territory. It was a sub-committee of the house committee on territories, composed of five congressmen. They were accompanied by their wives.

At the hearings spokesmen of Hawaii's white citizenship and others of Japanese, Chinese, Portuguese and native Hawaiian ancestry, these being the principal racial constituents of the population, were heard. About three in four of the speakers wanted statehood at an early date. All at present or in the past connected with active Hawaiian politics were for it.

The opposition proved a vigorous minority. As the hearings were in progress, the Honolulu Advertiser, the principal morning newspaper in Hawaii, published a first-page editorial opposing a change from the territorial status at present.

While the junketing by the party of congressmen doesn't indicate coming favorable action in congress, any development involving a possible addition to the Union possess a compelling public interest. At least, the bill should not be advanced before more hearings reflecting the judgment of the present states as fully as those in Hawaii have reflected the wishes of the people.

Adding a vote or two in the house would be a matter to reckon with, too; but adding two votes in the Senate from Hawaii, all things considered—especially her racial diversity and her supreme interest in the cane sugar industry—would be a matter of the very first national consequence.

CARRYING MONEY

A recent business note reports a demand from the men for larger pocket books. Does this mean that they have more money, so that a more spacious purse is required?

Whatever this sign indicates, American men have a lot to learn about carrying money. Many of them carry far too much in their pockets. It is this habit of carrying money that has made the hold-up trade what it is. In spite of all the talk of poverty, it is a common thing to read of some man being held up on a dark street or country road, and being compelled to hand over a roll of several hundred dollars to some gunman.

Every time such a robbery is committed, more desperate men are emboldened to hold up the wayfarer, and many a celebration in the underworld is financed with the spoils thereby abstracted from honest citizens.

The traditional place of concealment for the feminine world was the stocking. It was about as safe a place as could be devised. If the ladies should return to that fashion, the handbag snatchers will have to go out of business. As for the men, they need some safer way to carry money. The man who goes out with a thick wad in his vest pocket, which he frequently unrolls and displays publicly, forms the raw material out of which the crook world extracts a handsome business.

"WIFE IN CUSTODY" by BEATRICE LUBITZ

CHAPTER I

THE Anastasia Beauty Salons were not officially open for appointments until nine in the morning, but the operators were required to be in at eight sharp. Nor did the beauticians enter through the luxurious velvet and silken reception room, with its elegant chairs and its bowls of fresh flowers on self-conscious little tables.

There was a shabby footmarked door behind the elevators, marked in peeling gilt letters EMPLOYEES, that led into a long narrow room bordered on one side by white wash-bowls under dingy mirrors and on the other by green perforated steel lockers. At the door bristled a time clock. A few lumpy chairs and wicker chairs stood uninvitingly about.

At eight o'clock any morning the room sprang into life; girls rushed in and with more than ordinary viciousness pumped the long red hand of the time clock.

The operators then stepped briskly out of their own clothes into an Anastasia uniform, hung in a paper bag on the outside of each locker and left there a few minutes earlier by the laundress.

The Anastasia uniform was a tailor-made white broadcloth dress (the girls paid for them but the Salon took care of the laundering). The passionate desire of every woman at the time was to look boyish and tight brassieres flattened their breasts back so harshly that the long-waisted, short-skirted dresses in vogue in 1921 made the Anastasia beauticians look like so many leggy, white-frocked little school-girls—from the neck down. There was no loitering in the washroom because in winter the room was five degrees colder than the street and in summer it was a vapor bath. It was bitterly agreed by all that the Rileys, who owned the Anastasia chain of beauty salons, had purposely planned this fondling discomfort to discourage lingering in the washroom. Smoking was hysterically forbidden.

As they dressed and changed to the white shoes and stockings that completed the outfit, there was a wealth of colorful profanity on behalf of the Rileys. They had, however, to be always on the qui vive. One never knew when a Riley would pop in on them. This uncertainty added spice and the thrill of danger to the most innocent conversation.

Twenty-five girls were now in the cramped, air-tight vault of a room, washing, changing and making up their complexions with cakes of rouge. At each door a sentry was posted to keep watch and warn of the approach of one of the Riley sisters, daughters of old Anastasia Riley, for whom the business was named. Fortunately, Miss Stella Riley, who was in charge of this, the Forty-fourth Street branch, could since her marriage several months ago be depended upon not to get in before ten.

There was a whole hour before the phone would begin its strident buzzing and the appointments to book in. As soon as the girls were uniformed they slumped out of the washroom into the salon. All the preparations for the day had to be made in this one hour. They darted back and forth along the smooth floor, tiled like a Roman bath.

The salon was a splendid high-ceilinged room, about a hundred feet long and half as wide, on the fifteenth floor of the Federal Trust Building on Forty-fourth Street at Fifth Avenue. It had solid white marble slabs for dressing tables and glittering beveled mirrors. The room was partitioned off into isles of cubicles hung with black and white rubberized silk curtains. Each cubicle was a unit of glittering efficiency.

The manicuring tables flanked the windows and the morning sun gleamed on the shining array of scissors and files and clippers. Now the beauticians were stacking up towels and linen sheets which were counted and checked out by Dolly, the colored "linen" girl who was as heavily keyed as a warden. The seven manicurists stacked up nests of rose-colored fluted paper dishes for the finger dipping bowls and were checked in their needs. These were then okayed by Miss Norma, in charge of supplies, who also waited on the outside trade. There was yet to be an operator who could slip a cake of nail polish into her pocket for the kid sister at home or flich a tube of hair cream for her own use.

From the doorway where Miss Vera was on guard, "Sh. sh. sh. . . so loud. I just saw a dame who looked like Frozen Face. But it wasn't. Anyway, pipe down."

At the mention of their common enemy it was as if a strong wind swept them all together. No topic of conversation was so aggressively stimulating as a discussion of the Rileys. The four Riley sisters, Anastasia Riley, the mother, and Walter Riley, the only man in the family who owned the shops, were an endless and fertile field for gossip and abuse. And the elopement, over a month ago, of Stella Riley, who ruled this branch of the chain with a mailed fist, was still new enough to offer rich possibilities for conjecture. It was common knowledge that Jerry Leach, the husband, who was now in charge of the only Brooklyn branch of the business, had been a riding master in the Central Park Academy. Miss Stella Riley in the past had been in the habit of riding every morning and coming in in her stunning riding habit, later to change in her private office. Now that Jerry (the girls called him the stableboy) was in charge of one of the Anastasia Salons, Stella Riley's morning riding had ceased.

"Say, d'ja notice how English she's getting since she's married to the Stableboy?" contributed Miss Mabel, who plucked eyebrows.

They giggled each in her cubicle. "They say he's younger than her," contributed Miss Sheila, a wide-eyed, snub-nosed Irish girl, quite unexpectedly beautiful.

Miss Mabel, the wit, suddenly dissolved into weak laughter. She managed to gasp between shrieks that Ethel Riley's husband (Ethel was the youngest of the Riley girls) in his uniform had looked like a boy scout.

The room rang with laughter.

"Say, what makes you so quiet, Helen? Why don't you say something? You ain't going loyal, I hope." At this rally, the girls roared afresh. Irene Riley, the eldest sister, who was in charge of the magnificent Fifty-seventh Street Salon, had once given the girls a talk on loyalty. Later the talk had been printed and hung in the washroom.

Helen Schiller was fling her nails. She laughed good-naturedly. In the roomful of pretty girls—and the Anastasia beauticians were hired not only because of their skill, but with an eye to pulchritude—Helen Schiller was noticeably lovely, but with a quieter, more delicate charm than most of the others.

Before Helen had time to answer, a warning signal came from Miss Vera. "Sh. . ."

Sound died suddenly. Each beautician stood at her post with a pleasant professional smile. The phone started up its incessant buzz and Miss Irma's affected telephone voice floated in to them. "Anastasia's Forty-fourth Street. Good mornin' over and over like a litany."

Miss Vera ushered in the first appointments. The Forty-fourth Street branch catered to the higher-priced business girls, secretaries, buyers, a smattering of theatrical people and middle-class middle-aged matrons. The cream of the trade, of course, was at Fifty-seventh Street. All the big movie stars who were in town and famous actresses and actors went there. Society people and expensively dressed women and,

on occasion, certain frowsy women who owned the shops, were an endless and fertile field for gossip and abuse. And the elopement, over a month ago, of Stella Riley, who ruled this branch of the chain with a mailed fist, was still new enough to offer rich possibilities for conjecture. It was common knowledge that Jerry Leach, the husband, who was now in charge of the only Brooklyn branch of the business, had been a riding master in the Central Park Academy. SELECT CLOTHING THAT HARMONIZES FOR COLOR SCHEME

By Rhondana A. Armstrong (Home Economics Representative)

The deep, rich, and varied colors seen in the fall and winter dresses bear out the earlier forecast for a colorful winter. It is not difficult to select one's favorite color but will it be becoming, and how will it combine with the remainder of your wardrobe. Are important questions that must be answered truthfully.

If the new coat purchased this fall (or last) is black, almost any color will look well with it. If it is a color it may limit the number of combinations to be worn with it. The woman with good taste and good sense of color, will choose her colored accessories with great care. Blues, reds, greens, gold, and purple in gloves, shoes, belts, bags, scarfs, etc., offer a wide range of choice. But too much of a good thing is less pleasing than too little. Two bright colored accessories are usually enough. If the coat is fur-trimmed this may be matched in color by the hat or shoes.

The coat or suit is the foundation color note with which to begin. These outer garments can be classified under five colors (either solid plain color or a mixed tweed in which one color predominates)—black, brown, navy, green and red. Greens vary from dark blue green to the yellowish green, and reds may be wine color or the rust red which looks so well with brown.

Suppose your coat is black and you already have a bright red wool dress ready for a second winter. Why not have a black dress—black always ranks high in fashion's favor—in one of the interesting rough crepes. It need not be all black. There are bright accents either in metal trim or in white or bright colors—collars, cuffs, belts, or ascot scarfs. If you prefer a color—choose a becoming green, violet, gold or beige. The hat may match either dress or coat but if you have but one hat, it should be black. Hosiery of taupe or rust beige will harmonize

Home Heating Hints

by JOHN BARCLAY

BUILDING a fire is a very simple job but, as in everything else, there is a right and wrong way of doing it. From my experience, the quickest and easiest way to light a fire is this:

First of all, if there is a layer of ashes on the grate, leave it there. About two inches of ashes on the grate help a lot.

Then spread about two inches of coal uniformly over the ashes.

On top of this fresh coal put a good charge of kindling, consisting of newspapers and light wood or charcoal.

Be sure that the Turn Damper in the smokepipe and the Ashpit Damper are wide open and the Check Damper closed. This will create the strong draft which is needed to ignite the fire.

Now light the kindling and when it is burning freely, slowly add more coal. The kindling will ignite the fresh coal both above and below it, and you can then add more coal and thus quickly build up a good deep fire.

Occasionally you may find, when the kindling wood begins to burn, that smoke starts coming out through the cracks around the furnace doors. This is due to the fact that the chimney, being cold, does not provide sufficient draft to carry off the smoke. This condition can be overcome by igniting a piece of wadded newspaper and inserting it into the Check Damper. The air in the flue pipe and chimney will become heated, and start a draft action, carrying away the smoke.

with all your colors. Shoes and bag should be black.

With a brown coat one might choose a brown dress with metallic accents, or a becoming shade of rust red, yellowish green or gold. Colored shoes are popular, but in a limited wardrobe, brown shoes would be the best selection. Again the hat may match either coat or dress. Bag and gloves to match the dress are smart.

Rust colored coats limit dress choice for few colors aside from rust, brown or black, will harmonize with them. In this scheme accessories should match the dress, unless it is rust, then use brown. Beige gloves and bag would be pleasing.

West Point Will-o'-the-Wisp

By BURNLEY

When Waco Jack Buckler graduated last year, there was much walling and gnashing of teeth at West Point, for there was apparently no adequate successor to the brilliant Texan on the 1935 Army squad, and no team can get very far without a good climber runner as an offensive threat.

Jimmy Craig, sophomore ball totter, and Duke Nazzaro, hard-running veteran, were groomed to fill Buckler's brogans, but neither quite filled the bill. Then with the Harvard game, the wraith-like "Monk" Meyer leaped into the spotlight. Meyer, a tall, thin man, flits through a broken field like a phantom, rifles bullet-like passes with machine-like precision, and boots tremendous spirals down the striped gridiron.

Where, you will say, was this phenom hiding in the early weeks of the season? Well, the Monk was not exactly an unknown quantity—even last year, as a yearling, he had the reputation of being the most talented packer of the porker's hide on the Army squad, but an unfortunate tendency to fumble at the crucial moments kept him on the bench.

Mister Meyer did no fumbling against Harvard, however; and the Thin Man of West Point practically licked the Crimson eleven single-handed. The Monk doesn't appear to have a rugged enough build for football, as he packs only 159 pounds on his spare six-foot frame; but he seems to be wiry enough to stand the gaff.

If that fumbling habit doesn't return, it looks like Gar Davidson has a real successor to the graduated Buckler.

DEAN DETTON TO MEET JUMPING JOE SAVOLDI

TRENTON, Nov. 13.—Dean Detton, Salt Lake City flash, has been signed by Matchmaker Johnny Ipp to meet "Jumping" Joe Savoldi at the Arena tonight.

Detton defeated Savoldi in Philadelphia a few weeks ago and last Friday he fought a corking draw with Chief Little Wolf. He and the Indian fought a sensational battle that ended with both men being disqualified for fighting outside the ring.

Ray Fabiana, the Philadelphia promoter, sought to re-match Savoldi and Detton for his club but Ipp had Savoldi under contract and secured the services of Detton immediately after the Little Wolf setto.

Detton has defeated some of the best men in the game since coming east. His list of victories include the names of Abe Kashay, Jim Browning, Cliff Olson, Sander Szabo, Ernie Dusek, Bull Martin and other top-notchers.

Savoldi, who won his greatest fame as a football hero for Notre Dame, has never tasted defeat at the Arena. He is anxious to revenge the win that Detton holds over him and feels that his famed "Dropkick" will bring him victory.

A sterling set of preliminaries will precede the main event. Al Morcier, French Canadian, who is rapidly finding favor with the fans, meets tough Charley Strack, New York rowdy and ex-Colgate football luminary. Rusty Westcott, Hawaiian-American youngster, faces a stern test in Pat McKay, Memphis Irishman, who has never lost a bout here. Cliff Olson, classy Swede, tangles with Dobie Osborne, Texas cowboy.

The Savoldi-Detton setto is slated over the best two fall out of three route, while the others are 30 minute time limit matches.

SCHOOL PROGRAM

For a period of 11 minutes, just previous to 11 a. m., Monday, Bristol high school students held brief programs, in commemoration of Armistice Day. A paper prepared by the honor society was read in each room, the content revolving about discouragement of war. Flag salutes followed.

SPORT SHOTS by Maxwell Gordon

As a rule, when a boxing program gets a lot of advance build-up, and when the fighters start telling what they are going to do to the other fellow, when they meet it is usually a lot of blarney . . . they rarely materialize.

But the spectators who were able to squeeze into the St. Ann's arena Monday night . . . were treated to a boxing show that lived up to every bit of advance publicity . . . what a show . . . what a show.

We couldn't begin to pick out the bout that was best because the rip-snorting set-to between Tony Puccio and Johnny Arillo had the fans screwy . . . This was a return affair with the Wilmington entry getting the nod over Puccio for
